History:

Nakhari grew up in the city of Lordaeron. Her parents ran an inn there. She was the beloved, and somewhat spoiled, baby of the family, doted on by her two older siblings, the twins Aelia and Ashly, and by her parents. Nakhari adored and looked up to both of her siblings, but was closer to Ashly than to Aelia, since both of them had a natural inclination toward dark magic. Ashley began training as a warlock when he was a teenager, and Aelia began training as a paladin at roughly the same time. Aelia was upset about her brother's chosen path, and Nakhari in turn was angry at Aelia for holding it against Ashly.

Lordaeron fell when Nakhari was thirteen years old. Her parents were killed during the attack, and she believed her brother was as well. Aelia was away at the time, being trained as a paladin in Stormwind. Nakhari escaped the notice of the Scourge forces by hiding in a closet, then fled the city with a group of refugees.

She spent the next two years in an orphanage run by the church, where her attitude, as well as her interest in dark magic, frequently got her into trouble. Getting caught in a compromising position with an older boy didn't help much either.

During her time at the orphanage, she met Brother Crowley, a member of the Scarlet Crusade. As she was obsessed with the idea of destroying the undead and paying them back for Lordaeron, they had a lot in common. He became one of her few friends at the time.

At the age of fifteen, Nakhari left the orphanage to pursue training as a warlock. For a time, her teacher was Killean Felborn, who she came to admire and deeply respect, and eventually to consider a close friend.

When she was twenty, she was reunited with her sister Aelia. The two had a rocky relationship at first, as Aelia disapproved of Nakhari's chosen path, but they eventually resolved those differences. Nakhari eventually moved in with Aelia, who had set up a suite for Nakhari in her house, consisting of a bedroom and a private study/work area. Aelia set Nakhari's rooms up as a surprise for Nakhari. She dragged Nakhari along on shopping trips to get ideas of her taste in furnishings and consulted with Killean to find out how she would need her study set up and what books and materials would be useful to her. Although embarrassed by her own "mushy sentimentality," Nakhari was deeply touched by the gesture.

Driven by her desire to fight back against the undead, Nakhari joined the Scarlet Crusade, though both Killean and Aelia tried to talk her out of it. While she was there, she was subject to a "quarantine and interrogation," ostensibly to ensure that she was not a plague carrier or infiltrator, but was really a prolonged period of torture designed to break new Crusaders' will and ensure that they could be easily controlled through fear. After her indoctrination, she left the Crusade, almost more angry at herself for trusting them than she was at them for what had been done to her. Although she didn't tell her sister what happened, Aelia managed to find out. In anger at what had been done to her sister, she punched Crowley, only barely restraining herself from murdering him. Aelia's order punished her for this hot-headed action, but this strengthened Nakhari's relationship with her sister.

After spending several months recovering from her injuries, Nakhari went to Duskwood to help deal with the undead problem there. Her time with the Crusade hadn't dulled her desire to fight the undead, but she was determined to do it on her own terms, rather than as the minion of a group of fanatics. She's been threatened with death after leaving the Crusade, but so far no one has struck against her. (This may have something to do with the fact that, shortly after she left them, the Scarlet Monastery was completely destroyed, with only one survivor left, and the Crusade was much more worried about picking up the pieces and rebuilding their stronghold than about dealing with a single deserter.) While she was adventuring in Duskwood, Nakhari's life was saved by a blood elf rogue named Evantine. The two hit it off instantly and almost had sex, but Evantine accidentally started pulling magic from Nakhari, got upset, and told her to leave. They met again in the Arathi Basin, on opposite sides. Evantine captured an Alliance fighter whose entire unit had been killed. When she realized her captive was Nakhari, she killed the orc who found them talking and let Nakhari get back to her forces. She also prevented a sneak attack on Nakhari's commander, taking an arrow that was meant for him. This resulted in her capture by the Alliance. She was kept away from the other Horde prisoners for her own safety. The Alliance forces were unsure what to do with her. On the one hand, she had fought for the other side and been taken prisoner, but on the other hand, she had stopped a sneak attack and saved the commander's life. Evantine was taken to the Stormwind stockade, and Nakhari spoke to Killean and Aelia, both of whom went to the Highlord on Evantine's behalf. Evantine was released, on the condition that she stay out of Stormwind territory.

Nakhari and Evantine eventually developed a romantic relationship, with Nakhari taking every opportunity she could to spend time with Evantine in Ratchet. Nakhari and Evantine's relationship wasn't exclusive, however, and when she went to Outland, Evantine became involved with Zephyr, a dragon in the form of a high elf, in Shattrath. Also around this time, Nakhari met Eadwyn, a Draenei shaman, and the two became adventuring partners. They eventually became bed partners as well, not out of any romantic attachment, but more because it was something to keep them both entertained while adventuring in Stranglethorn Vale.

After Aelia and Killean went on several missions for the Keepers of Time, Aelia found out from one of the keepers that her twin brother Ashly was alive. When she told Nakhari, Nakhari was both ecstatic that her adored older brother wasn't dead and deeply worried for his safety. Aelia had been given an indication that he had survived Lordaeron, but nothing of his whereabouts.

Based on Evantine's earlier suspicions, Nakhari came to the conclusion that her brother was in fact Killean, her friend and mentor. (Killean had no memory of his own past.) Aelia confirmed this by asking their father for specific details about Ashly's apparent death and finding out that what happened to him matched Killean's own injuries (which he learned from the Keepers of Time that he'd received fighting the Scourge). Based on comments Killean had made about not wanting to know his past, Aelia chose to keep this information a secret. Nakhari, however, felt Killean had the right to know the truth and told him. He then spoke with the Keepers of Time, who confirmed that he was in fact Aelia and Nakhari's brother.

During the second plague outbreak and the siege of Stormwind, Aelia asked Nakhari to take two of her friends, Janaomira and Aldria, to safety. Nakhari was deeply traumatized by the situation in Stormwind, which brought back memories of the fall of Lordaeron, and she feared for the lives of her brother and sister. She took Janaomira and Aldria to Ratchet, which was not hit as hard by the plague or the Scourge attacks. She stayed with Evantine at her place. Knowing how terrified Nakhari was for her family, Evantine snuck into Stormwind and fought the Scourge, watching Aelia's back. Because of this, King Varian Wrynn granted her a full pardon, as well as offering her a writ of safe passage and a job with SI:7.

Shortly thereafter, Evantine proposed to Nakhari, giving her a beautiful engagement ring. Once they were engaged, they made their relationship exclusive. (Zephyr was vaguely happy for Evantine, but didn't much care one way or the other--Eadwyn was thrilled for Nakhari, but joked that adventuring with her was going to be much less interesting.)

Once King Wrynn declared war on the Horde, SI:7 set Evantine up in order to establish a cover for her to spy on the Horde. She was attacked by three street thugs, whom she killed, and was promptly arrested for manslaughter. The charge was dismissed, as it was self-defense, and only then did she discover that the whole incident had been arranged by SI:7, so that her writ of safe passage would be "revoked," and she would have believable reasons for leaving Stormwind and associating with the Horde. She packed her things and moved back to Ratchet in the middle of the night. Nakhari left Stormwind as well, moving to Ratchet in order to be with Evantine.
